This is an exhaustive list of the conflicts of interest and business entanglements I have with players and teams that I expect to compete against in professional tournaments. Business entanglement include, but are not limited to, shared management, shared ownership of entities, licensing, and loans. Other party: Flashpoint, its founding teams (MIBR, Dignitas, Gen.G, Envy, c0ntact Gaming, FunPlus Phoenix, MAD Lions), and operating partner FACEIT

Nature of conflict: Cloud9 is a shareholder and a founding partner in Flashpoint together with various other teams and operating partner FACEIT. Given business relationship, an argument could be made that every team involved being successful could positively impact the other teams' business through higher monetization of Flashpoint, which then directly impacts revenue share and thus commercial success/viability of the participants.

Other party: League Championship Series ("LCS") and its franchise owners with CS:GO teams; Overwatch League ("OWL") and its franchise owners with CS:GO teams; Call of Duty League ("CDL") and its franchise owners with CS:GO teams; Rainbow 6 ("R6") and its other partner teams with Ubisoft; Other similar arrangements in other games in the ecosystem with teams who may or may not have teams in CS:GO and may or may not compete in the RMR qualification system.

Nature of conflict:

Cloud9 owns and operates teams in various other games beyond CS:GO with agreements somewhat similar to those for Flashpoint, where other Valve Major and/or RMR qualification system participants also hold teams. Some of these business relationships could be construed as a potential conflict.
